How to Install the Standard Photoshop Download the installer from Adobe's site and go to the "Install" option in the installer (you can probably just double-click on it if you have downloaded it to your computer already). Unzip the package and run the installer. During installation, Photoshop will ask you whether or not you would like to complete the installation. Simply answer Yes to finish installing. After installation is completed, you will see the "Portable Photoshop" folder displayed in your Documents folder. Initial Setup The initial setup is pretty straightforward, though it does require some setting up to begin. You will need to set your geographic location and time zone. Import your personal information from your social networks (optional) Open Photoshop and open the Book > Help menu. Select Photoshop > Photoshop Help > Photoshop User Manual to read the book and quickly scan through various topics to get yourself up to speed. Open Help > Photoshop Help again to return to this menu. Select Photoshop Help > Photoshop Help > Photoshop Setup > Photoshop Help to access Photoshop Help. Photoshop > Photoshop Help to access the main Photoshop Help page. Photoshop > Photoshop Help > Photoshop Setup > Photoshop Help to access the Photoshop Setup help pages. Because you have set your time zone and location, you can now access date and time settings, which is set by default to your system time. (If you would like Photoshop to automatically set your time according to your geographic location, set this to Yes instead.) Personal information can be imported from Facebook and Google+ accounts. If you do not want to import your personal information, you can skip this step. Go to the Photoshop > Preferences > Account and click on the "+" to set up the information about your account (you can set up up to five accounts with Photoshop). You can also input your email and password to login to Photoshop. If you chose to import personal information, this information will be inputted to Photoshop. If you do not want to import personal information, you can skip this step and login without importing this information. At the time of this publication, the account functionality in Photoshop is fairly rudimentary. It does not provide the degree of flexibility that more advanced social networking sites have. However, it is still a useful tool for beginners to setup a profile to provide their information to Photoshop. Print Options There are no

Lack of consensus among clinicians regarding evidence-based practice among Canadian family medicine residents. Evidence-based practice (EBP) has been suggested as an ethical and realistic skill to incorporate into the practice of family medicine. To date, two surveys have sought information about the perceived status of EBP in family medicine training, and the attitudes of residents towards EBP. Neither of the surveys provide a consistent picture of the residents' level of knowledge or commitment to EBP. To determine if there is consensus among Canadian family medicine residents regarding the importance of EBP. This paper presents the results of a survey sent to 100 randomly selected family medicine residents in the Province of Ontario, Canada. The survey obtained information from each participant regarding his or her level of knowledge of EBP, professional values, attitudes and behaviors towards EBP, and the amount of instruction he or she received on the subject. The response rate was 75%, yielding a 95-subject sample. The response rate for items regarding attitudes and behaviors was significantly higher than the response rate for knowledge and instruction. The most common response was that residents felt both knowledgeable and committed to EBP. However, nearly a third (32%) disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement "I am committed to applying evidence to practice." The second most common response (30%) was that residents were knowledgeable about EBP, but not committed. The respondents were not classified into one of four categories (e.g., high, low, knowledgeable, committed) regarding either knowledge or commitment to EBP, and there was no apparent consensus among the respondents. The results suggest that EBP needs to be taught more widely in residency training. Significant Stiffness of Noncontact Force Mapping Under Varying Magnetic Field. The noncontact force mapping (NCFM) technique provides real-time, contactless measurements of force fields of a variety of materials including biological tissues. Previously, the method has been extensively studied for soft materials in which the magnetic field is fixed and field homogeneity is high. When dealing with living tissues, however, the stiffness and the field variation should be taken into account. Here, we analyze the NCFM stiffness and its stability for different magnetic fields. We confirm that, regardless of the materials, there is a linearly increasing stiffness over magnetic field variations from 0 to 15 T. In the case of soft and stiff materials, the field effect can be observed with less than 10% error. For very stiff materials, however, the NCFM sensitivity is not very high under 15 T, and the
