College is a golden time that every student remembers throughout their lives. However, it is also a golden chance to have a grip on essay writing techniques. Unfortunately, students are also part of society and are often derived from the forces of society. Therefore, it is observed, in some cases, that some students are unable to learn the skills required to write a good essay inside of the classroom. However, they have required essay writer at every stage of their academic career, especially at College.

If you are among many other students who have missed the chance of learning essay writing skills, this is a good opportunity for you. The first step is to understand the type of essay that you are required to write. This can be done in many ways; however, the best way is to look at the instructions provided by the teacher. It is likely to be the case that you will be advised by the teacher to write an argumentative essay, descriptive essay, or literary essay, etc. whatsoever, whatever the type is, the first step is to identify the type. There is another way to identify, which is by analyzing the topic. You can also judge, with your instincts that the topic is more of an argumentative type or the descriptive type. After analyzing the type of essay, the next step you should take is to study something on the same topic. You should have adequate background knowledge regarding the topic. It is not mandatory to read everything you find on the topic, but a background knowledge of the topic will work as good.

Let's assume you have identified the type of the essay, and it turned out to be argumentative in type. It is the most common type of essay at the College level. For an argumentative essay, the next step is to compose a thesis statement. When I used to write my essay, I put maximum emphasis on the thesis statement. An argumentative thesis statement comprises two main parts. The first part is the claim or the stance that you have taken on the issue. The second part is the main argument that you are going to use in the essay to prove your stance.

After having composed the thesis statement, the next step is to write an introduction. The introduction is also an important part. Introductions should be catchy and relevant because they create the first impression on the reader. An essay writer should provide a hook statement at the start of the introduction. A hook statement, it is obvious from the name what it does. It is advised to the students to provide insight into the problem in the introduction part. It is important to illustrate the problem clearly and elaborate to the reader that how it is going to affect the reader. This practice will create value for your essay in the eyes of the reader.

After providing the introduction, but the thesis statement at the end of the introduction. A thesis should be placed in such a manner that it becomes the last sentence of the introduction. Now comes the body paragraphs. At this stage, divide your main argument into sub-arguments. Take help from your study material or Google Scholar. This is a technical task and you can always take help from some professional essay writing service, and they can help just fine. Otherwise, you can search for various scholarly articles that were written to write essay for me and prove your stance and take support from them.

The conclusion of your essay should start with the thesis statement, in different wording. After you have restated the thesis, provide a brief account of arguments that you have made throughout the essay. It is not advised to the students that they should provide complete arguments, along with the pieces of evidence. However, a brief account of how you have defended your claim will be sufficient. Other than that, avoid any other idea that you have not provided in the body of the essay. It is a common mistake on the writer's side that they provide additional information in the conclusion, which is not a good practice.

Another important thing that you should focus on is a citation. Whatever material you use in your essay, as evidence, make sure that you properly cite that source. If you fail to provide proper references, your work will be considered plagiarized. Plagiarism is not a good practice and is considered unethical in academic spheres. Provide a bibliography at the end of your essay. the bibliography is presented on a separate page, which is the last page of your essay. By following these basic and easy steps, you will be able to write an essay, and earn good grades.
