

How to Cite Sources in APA Format 2022

In academic writing, several formatting styles are followed. Each institute has set its requirements which are to be followed by the students while writing academic assignments and thesis. The use of a format allows for setting a standard across the institute. There are several formatting styles like APA, APA, Harvard, Chicago, Turabian, AMA, etc. Different universities and institutes have defined different formatting styles for essay writing service. For example, in the United Kingdom (UK), the Harvard style is usually followed in most of the universities. In law schools, normally Chicago style is preferred. Psychology departments prefer APA style. However, the use of each format can also be implemented in any academic department. In the USA, some universities follow APA, some follow APA, and some follow others.

APA stands for Modern Language Association and is being used all over the world for technical and scientific writing. APA style has its distinct formatting style which is going to be the topic of this blog. The formatting is not a difficult task but you can also avail the service of a professional essay writer to format the document according to APA format. While writing an academic document, the author needs to write my essay and mention the sources from where the information or data has been taken. It is ethical and obligatory to mention citation, otherwise it will be regarded as property theft and it is an unethical practice. Therefore, citing a source is an important practice in academic writing. Even if you have paraphrased the original sentences, it still needs to be cited because the idea taken was originally someone else's, not yours. Furthermore, if you are presenting an idea or expressing the results of your study, citing sources will strengthen your results and ideas, increasing the credibility of your studies.

In academic writing, the sources cited while writing are known as in-text citations. The In-text citations in APA are presented in parenthesis if the reference is given at the end of the sentence, before the period e.g. (Smith). If the instructor has also asked for the page numbers then they can be added just after the last name of the author e.g. (Smith 190). In the second case, the in-text citation has to be given at the start of the middle of the sentence "essay writer", it will not be given in the parenthesis e.g. "Smith elaborated that". Similarly, if the page number has to be mentioned here, it will be added at the end of the sentence in the parenthesis e.g. "Smith elaborated that the resistance elicits from the plants' defense mechanism (190)". This is how the in-text citations for single-author sources are given in the APA format.

Finally, when you are done with citing the sources in the text through the assignment, then all these sources are to be mentioned at the end of the document as a list under the heading "Works Cited" in APA. These headings can vary from format to format. The examples for single author source, two author source, and multiple author sources are given as:

A few years back, I always had a difficult time understanding and applying these formatting styles in the assignments. This usually took me hours to complete the document formatting manually. Whenever I had to write my essay, I always wanted to get away with this part of formatting the document. Most of the time I asked my friends to help me with this part, and thanks to my friends, they helped me a lot.

Now that years have passed and formatting the citations is not a problem anymore. Several software and applications have been developed that come in handy for performing this job. These applications have several formats built-in and you can just format the whole document in just a click. But we are going to share details about these software in some other blog. Further, if you still find it difficult to format the assignments according to a specific format, you can always use the essay writer as these services are quite good and can provide you with a document in any required format. I have also availed of these services quite a time and I have had a really good experience with them. You can also hire these services that can save you a lot of time, but not money.